You never know what someone is going through. A few nice words can help a person a lot more than you think.

What words would you use to describe your back-to-school experience?

All these words (these feelings and experiences) are valid. Many of us may be feeling all or most of these as we start back to school.

So, let’s be patient and flexible, and kind to ourselves and others, while we work through these times TOGETHER.

We share the experience of living through a pandemic. What, maybe, is not shared? Local, family and individual circumstances and outcomes probably vary. That means the back-to-school experience may be different for some of us, while also feeling similar for many of us, some or most of the time.

Here is a question our psychology and social work/special services counsellors get asked A LOT right now...

Q: “I’m feeling really anxious about schools and COVID. I’m also worried about my child’s learning and their need to socialize with others . How do I deal with my own worries without upsetting my child? How do I help them feel safe and excited about school? I want them to be safe but not scare them. I want them to have some sort of “normal” in their lives except I don’t even know what that new “normal” is!!

A: It sure isn’t easy being an adult sometimes! We are always trying to work out what is best for our kids and ourselves while sometimes managing very difficult situations over which we may have little control. Feeling anxious or overwhelmed by that is normal. Those feelings tell us “Hey, we have a problem here!” and then activate us to try to solve it. Things to consider:

- You are not alone.
- You can be honest with children about what matters most by sticking to the facts (at age appropriate levels), speaking calmly, and checking in with them to see what they understand and what they need.
- Focus on where you DO have control - be COVIDSmart; set time to do something fun with your family; acknowledge feelings and then inspire confidence that “we can do this!”, etc.
